lower vertical edge portion adjacent said locking recess that is generally perpendicular to said flat lower ledge, and each protrusion comprises a lower straight edge formed beneath said ramp that is generally perpendicular to said flat lower ledge and spaced apart from and parallel with said arm lower vertical edge portion, such that when the lock seats against and within said locking recesses, the legs are compressively captivated together in fixed, radially spaced apart alignment with said protrusion elongated inner edges being compressively locked together in mutually abutting relation, said hooks are drawn into engagement with said top, and the periphery of said lock abuts the lower vertical edge portions of said arms..
